

The West White Rose Project Workers Celebrated the World Environment Day

This year, in celebration of the World Environment Day, more than 30 site personnel from SDP and Husky in Argentia participated in the global movement #BeatPlasticPollution by doing environmental clean-ups in the community. They spent a beautiful, sunny day on cleaning a local walking trail that borders the drinking water and picking up plastic debris along the coastline in a local beach in Freshwater, Dollmont's Beach.

"As we work adjacent to the ocean, we understand the importance of being part of the United Nation's initiative. The World Environment Day gives us the opportunity to give back to the community and more importantly, to reduce marine pollution,” said Amy Bradbury, Environmental Manager, West White Rose CGS Project.

These activities give local workers sense of community and motivate them to create good habits of keeping the environment clean. “Everybody was very engaging as they saw themselves on their days off enjoying fresh air and their kids playing on a clean sandy beach,” said Amy.

“Everybody should take environmental practices not only when they are at work because they have to, but also at home. An environmentally conscious mindset is the key to preventing environmental disasters in the future,” Amy said.

In addition, the SDP has given out more than 350 reusable mugs to people to promote the theme of plastics pollution.

More information about the World Environment Day, please visit <http://www.un.org/en/events/environmentday/index.shtml>